This enigmatic coin bears a curious mixture of Kushan, Hun and Gupta designs. With inscriptions like Devaputra and Shao it ought to be a Kushan issue, but the depiction and the type is similar to one issued by Hun king Narendraditya and the goddess on the reverse shows distinct similarity with that on some coins of Samudra Gupta. The coin presently remains unattributed but it is a very interesting piece, fitting in at the cusp of three major dynastic traditions.

134. Akbar (1556-1605 AD), A very enigmatic Silver coin dated AH 965 and struck to a 'Tanka' standard, weighing 10.82g. Obverse bears the Shahada and reverse has the full name of Akbar, Jalal al-Din Muhammad Akbar Badhshah Ghazi. Above the name, there is the date 965, although at this time the number 5 is more likely to be written as ٤. Above the king's name there are traces of a word which appears to end in -Ganw, written as گانو. This ending is usually seen for mints like Chatgaon (Chittagong), Sunargaon or Satgaon. The style and calligraphy of the coin also suggests a Bengal origin. In AH 965 there was hardly any Mughal presence in Bengal, but it is possible that a Mughal partisan might have issued it. There is no doubt that it is an interesting piece particularly with regards to the History of Bengal. Hitherto Unpublished, Dent in centre on reverse otherwise Very Fine, Extremely Rare.

This coin, struck in the month of Tir of AH 1021 has the emperor's name in an octagonal cartouche, while the name of the month, the date and the mint are all inscribed in a 'scalloped octagon' resembling the fusion of eight Mihrabs or 'prayer niches'. The style of inscription is Naskh as against the more usual Nastali'q.

It is unusual for a largesse coin, or 'Nisar', to have a weight of 1/10th Rupee, but as Nisars were struck as a 'functional' rather than a circulatory coinage, it is not surprising that their weights, particularly for low denominations, were often decided by the manufacturing demands than circulatory realities. It is worth noting that the coin inscription does not have the word 'Nisar' in it, but nevertheless the odd weight and the style/type make it certain that this must have functioned as a largesse coin.

In his 4th RY, Shah Jahan was at Burhanpur pursuing campaigns against the rebel Khan Jahan Lodhi and the Nizamshahi Sultanate. In the same year, there was a major famine. It was decided that till His Majesty remained at Burhanpur, every Monday a total of 5000 Rupees should be given away as largesse. Thus over Twenty Mondays, One Lac Rupees were donated to the poor as charity. This is very likely the backdrop for this coin being issued. Towards the end of RY 4, Shah Jahan's wife Mumtaz Mahal died at Burhanpur. This might also have resulted in some charity or alms-giving.

It was a town of great medieval importance and the coin was struck here during the first Deccan campaign undertaken during the reign of Shah Jahan against the Nizam Shahi sultanate of Ahmadnagar, resurgent under the leadership of Shahaji Bhonsle, the father of Shivaji.

This coin was perhaps struck as a 'bridging denomination' between the North Indian Rupee-Mohur system and the South Indian Fanam-Hoan/Pagoda system. 1/3rd Mohur weighed close to a Hoan in the South Indian system.

A similar rupee was published by the late Nicholas Rhodes in the supplement to ONS 161 ("Some New Silver Coins of Fateh Shah of Garhwal") which so far had remained unique. However, it had not been possible at the time to read the full legends, particularly the couplet on the obverse. This coin is therefore a welcome addition to our knowledge of the coinage of Fateh Shah of Garhwal.

Fateh Shah succeeded his grandfather in 1665, after his father Medini Shah died in exile. The kingdom of Garhwal had been a vassal of the Mughals and Fateh Shah could succeed only with Aurangzeb's approval. But by late 1680's Fateh Shah took advantage of the fact that the Emperor had been tied in long campaigns against the Marathas in the Deccan, and emerged as a very powerful ruler. He had been an ally of other resurgent leaders like the Sikh Guru Gobind Singh, but local politics meant they also had a fight (1688). Fateh Shah was a great patron of Art and literature. Like Akbar, he is said to have patronized 'Navaratnas' at his court.

The zenith of Fateh Shah's power came in 1692 when he attacked Saharanpur in the plains. He was repelled with great difficulty by Sayyad Ali, the Mughal commander. But he managed to establish a town named 'Fatehpur' in the plains. Around the same time, he expanded his kingdom into Sirmur and launched an expedition into Tibet.

The dates on this coin are extremely significant because they mark the year of its issue as 1692-93, exactly in the years which saw Fateh Shah's conquests. The striking of Mughal style coins, in his own name, was an act of great defiance. It can be viewed as a direct affront to Aurangzeb and an instrument or conscious demonstration of declaring independence by Fateh Shah. The reference to the grace of Badrinath ("Shri Badrinath Sahai") the Hindu Vishnava shrine of which Fateh Shah was a great devotee is of immense significance when viewed against this backdrop.
